THIRTY YEARS PASSED IN BED! How a Former Village Belle Has Kept a Remarkable Vow.

Mattituck (L. I.) Special. In this village lives a woman who has not been out of her bed for thirty years. She remains in her bed, not from any infirmity, but from choice.

Thirty years ago, when a pretty, attractive girl of eighteen, she was the belle of the village, a leader of all dances, picnics and social gatherings. She had any number of beaus, but, strange to say, had never received a proposal of marriage. This she felt keenly, particularly as her girl friends were one by one marrying.

Two or three months before her nineteenth birthday she told her mother that if she did not receive an offer of marriage before her birthday she would go to bed and remain there as long as she lived. Her mother treated it as a joke, and thought no more of it. The girl was doomed to disappointment, and, on retiring the night of her nineteenth birthday, said: "It's no use, and I'll never get up again." She has kept her word all of these years. Threats and persuasions had not the slightest effect upon her. Her mother took care of her at first, and then at the mother's death a sister took the task upon herself. Now the sister is dead and she is left to the care of more distant relatives. She is very cheerful and seemingly contented, and is always glad to have some of the neighbors drop in to chat with her. She is quite talkative until the subject of her keeping to her bed is broached. and then she has nothing whatever to say.

Her hair is gray and her skin very sallow, but one can easily see that in her vonth she must have been an extremely pretty girl. Her room is on the groundfloor, and in summer her bed is drawn up under the open window, on the outside of which has been built for her a wide ledge or shelf. Her head and shoulders are well wrapped up and she rests them on this

She will lie there by the hour looking up the street and holding in her hand a small mirror, held so that she can see what is coming behind her. She is very fond of children and they play around under her window and seem to quite like the decidedly queer looking object on the window ledge.

WHAT BABY'S CRY MEANS.

Certain Tones May Safely Be Taken to Indicate Certain Ailments. Boston Herald.

To most mothers the cry of infants indicates nothing beyond the fact that for some cause or other they are distressed, and yet it is full of meaning to those who are observant and quick to read signs. A loud and full cry, which evens wrnng from the little one, would suggest a severe pain somewhere, and more than likely in the bowels. A whimpering and fretfulness are generally very common, indeed, in diarrhea and other intestinal affections which are not so acutely painful, but are attended with a dull, uncomfortable feeling and tenderness. A cry that is constantly interrupted by rapid breathing or coughing is characteristic of trouble in the chest and suggests pneumonia or pleurisy.

There is one cry, the significance of which can never be mistaken, and that is the cry of brain trouble. This is a single, sharp, high-pitched shrick, which strikes the listener with chilling effect. When a child utters this cry at occasional intervals, also keeps rolling its head from side to side, at the same time pressing its back into the pillow and trying, as it were, to bore into the same there is little doubt of the existence of some serious brain disorder. Coiicky children frequently wake up with a sharp cry, but there are other conditions in which this peculiarity is noted. And in the absence of anv sign of intestinal disturbance a careful examination of every part should be made for a tender spot, because the cry indicates acute pain somewhere, perhaps the result of a fall or other accident or blow. It is quite a common symptom of disease of the hip joint. The cry of hunger or intense thirst is incessant and unappeasable except by satisfying the needs. The same cry, however, is characteristic of earache, and when water or food do not suppress it the mother should have the ears carefully examined by a physician. The cry of children occasionally has a nasal tone, which means, that there is cold in the head. cry that disturbs mothers greatly is loud and brazen and indicates that an attack of false croup is coming on, while a hoarse cry points to inflammation of the upper | pers piration from the heated brows of the | every one.

part of the windpipe. In membranous | devout who have traveled miles in order to croup, or diphtheria, usually one and the same, the cry is piteously weak and almost inaudible-always a serious sign.

THE MILLIONAIRE GROANED. He Groaned Because of the Political Disabilities of Millionaires.

A millionaire groaned as he read the political news of the times and thought of the glorious rivalries and splendid prizes of political life. "In politics," he remarked between groans, "this is the most unpromising country in the world for an ambitious millionaire. Such a man has no chance at all of getting elected to the highest office in the country, and has such a poor chance of being elected to any great office that it is not worth his while to try to get a nomi-

"Suppose, for example, that any one of the principal millionaires of New York were to be a candidate for the office of President of the United States, just think of what would happen. There would be an uproar and an uprising against him from Maine to Texas. The most opprobrious epithets would be applied to bim as a millionaire, the most disgracefel accusa-Farmers' Alliances would shout themselves hoarse in denouncing him; the workingmen would organize to defeat him, and the general run of people who have not much money would vote a ainst him sure. The cry of 'millionaire' would be fatal to him. There would be anti-millionaire songs, anti-millionaire stump speeches, and antimillionaire brass bands. "Yes, I have not forgotten that Mr. Tilden, who was rich, became a candidate for President; but the fortune that he possessed was never in evidence, as the French say, before the public, and was an inconsequential factor when compared with his overshadowing renown as a politician and statesman. His political predominance had no relation whatever to his wealth. He did not figure in the list of those towering millionaires whose prominence before the public is consequent upon their millions, and whose names every body is acquainted with. It is to these men that I am referring. There are among them men of great talent and executive ability which they would gladly use in the service of their country. They would like to run for office and get elected, but which of them would have a show of election? Has there been one millionaire among all the Presidents of the United States from Washington to Harrison? 'I know three millionaires who would make first-class Presidents, but there is not a party that would dare to nominate any of them. One of them has his investments in real estate, another in railroad stocks, and the other in something else; and there is not a doubt that the fact that they own large amounts of such kinds of property would give the demagogues the opportunity of assaulting them in ways that would tell upon the masses of voters. In fact, a millionaire has hardly any chance of getting into any high office, the candidate for which must be elected by popular vote. A very few millionaires have been sent to the Senate by State legislatures, and a few millionaires have got places in the diplomatic service by appointment of the President, and a few millionaires have been appointed to office in the President's Cabinet; but what I am complaining of is that hardly any millionaires would think of going before the people and asking for an election.

"Nearly all our Presidents have been men of small means, and not one of them has been a millionaire. In early times Washington and several of his successors were well off, and in later times Buchanan and Grant were well off; but this is all that can be said about their fortunes. I repeat that it would be no use for any of our great millionaires to run for the office of Presi-"It is different in other countries. In England, millionaires play a great part in politics and elections. Lord Salisbury, the Premier of England, is worth millions, and so are several of his colleagues in the government. There are plenty of millionaires in the House of Commons, and you will see plenty of millionaire candidates for membership in that House as soon as the elec-tions are held-Liberal and Radical candidates as well as Conservative and Unionist candidates. They enjoy the popular elections just as they enjoy field sports and fashionable life. In England a man who is a millionaire is not disqualified from going before the voters and asking them to elect him to Parliament or to any elective office. Then there is that ancient and peculiar institution, the House of Lords, which represents British milliousiredom in polities. In France, also, and in other con-tinental countries, the millionaires have as fair a show as other men bave in political life. The people elect millionaires to the French Chamber of Deputies and various high offices. I do not know how rich President Carnot is, but I should not be surprised if I were told that he is a millionaire, as was his predecessor. President Thiers. In Italy, Germany and other countries millionairs run for office. "Now, think of the names of the ten or the twenty leading millionaires of New York, and tell me which one of them would have any chance of election to the office of President of the United States. His millions would preclude the thought of his nomination, and would make it hard for him even to get a nomination to Congress."

The millionaire groaned.

One Finger-Bowl for the Crowd.

Kate Field's Washington. "That reminds me," said another man. "I was with Campbell in the last campaign. One day we came to a country town where we were entertained profusely by the wife of the editor of the county paper. She had enlisted all the women in the county. I think, and I never have seen a more bountiful feast in the country style than that one. She served a dinner for fifteen of us at 2 o'clock that was enough for a hundred men. Then at 5 o'clock, after the meeting, we came back to another spread that was even more elaborate. We were waited on by all the good Democratic women in the country, and when I could absolutely do no more I leaned back, hoping to be allowed to rest after the exertion. I looked up in time to see a portly woman appearing in the door with a glass bowl of capacious dimensions. I couldn't imagine what the purpose of was till she set it down before me. Then I concluded it was meant for a finger-bowl. So I used it. The next man to me was a local light, and, from the way he looked at me out of the corner of his eye, I concinded that he wasn't on very intimate terms with finger-bowls. He acted as if it were a great curiosity to him, and, in fact it was to me too, before long, for when I had finished the woman passed it to the man next to me, who imitated me as nearly as he could. and passed it along again. There were eight people before it reached Campbell, so he had time to get on to the scheme. The Governor never flinched, but there was the smallest kind of a twinkle in his eye as he paddled his own finger tips in the Bellamy finger-bowl."

New Kind of "Crazy Work." Harper's Bazar.

The following directions are for "crazy work" for sofa-pillows or reupholstering old chairs:

It in no way resembles the crazy-work of quilts, those nightmares of silk and satin conglomerate, but is worked with worsted upon canvas. The worker threads her needle with any color of wool she finds among her scraps, and embroiders in crossstitch, as far as its length allows, in any direction except a straight line. If she is expert she will double on herself and work several rows of short lines, making an irregular figure. Then, with black wool, the worker skirts the colored work she has finished. Another color is taken and used in the same way close to the black line of separation. This plan is pursued till the whole canvas is laid out like a map, with different-shaped blocks, or sections, of all imaginagile shapes, and all ontlined with black. More variety is given if varying lengths of wool are used, and it is very easy in working to give certain changes to the form of the sections. Sofa cushions are sometimes covered with this crazywork done wholly or in part with silk. It is a very convenient way of utilizing odds and ends of silk or wool which have been left over from other work.

The Age of the Bicycle.

One more evidence has been given that this is the age of bicycle. The Center Church, of Manchester, Conn., has voted to change a part of its horse-shed into a bicycle-shed so that those members of the congregation who come to the services on bicycles will have a p fill the family pew, mirrors to arrange dis-ordered waistbands, bows and bonnets, and whisk brooms to brush Connecticut sand from trousers and skirts; and last, but not least, a guardian to care for the two-wheeled steeds, while their riders are sing-ing the old-fashioned tunes or listening to a sermon lengthened out to eighthly or

This is perhaps the greatest triumph the bicycle has achieved. It came into being as a minister to pleasure, and although that is still its strongest hold, it has come to be used by the business man and the traveler, and its adaptation to the movement of armies and the distribution of the mails is being discussed. Its conquest of the church is greater than all these, however, and particularly in a State where the riding of a bicycle on any day in the week would have probably been forbidden by the Connecticut blue laws had the makers of those statutes imagined that such a vehicle would ever be invented.

HEALTH AND THE SKIN,

The Latter Is Helped as Much as the Other by Care and Dieting.

Cassell's Family Magazine. We must consider shortly the influence of general health on the skin. That it does act there can be no doubt; the examples are innumerable, but rather medical; and young ladies who find their complexions becoming yellow, or a sort of pale green, or too red, should consult their doctors, for, depend upon it, there is something wrong, and until it is put right local treatment of the skin is useless. To take a familiar instance; it is always said that flushing of the face after meals is a sign of indigestion. No doubt the liver and the stomach greatly influence the skin. A person, for instance, with diabetes is subject to carbuncle. Naturally, any poison circulating in the blood will affect the skin, especially if it is removed by the

As regards diet in relation to the skin, it is difficult to lay down general rules for all cases, but no doubt diet does greatly influence the skin; for instance, a man eats shell-fish and has an attack of nettle-rash. It is extremely advisable in skin disease to avoid all shell-fish (except oysters), goose and pork; all strongly-spiced things, such as highly-seasoned soups, pickles or curries. A mouthful of currie will cause many a person to perspire profusely about the head and face. Beer is extremely bad for most skin diseases. In all skin diseases over-fatigue 18 apt to become coarse, pailed and relaxed when the body is ill-nourished. Therefore, a nourishing and digestible diet is often of great importance, but it is impossible to prescribe general rules for all persons. A good breakfast is generally important, both as a sign of health and to give the body strength for the day. The Duke of Wellington, Sir Walter Scott and many other great men depended much on their breakfasts. Doctors know these facts so well that in some eruptions the patient has no local treatment whatever, and cases are brought to a successful issue by diet and internal medication alone.

What Sister Said.

Tid Bits.

"So you enjoyed your visit to the zoological gardens, did you?" inquired a young man of his adored one's little sister. "Oh, yes! And do you know, we saw a camel there that screwed its mouth and eyes around awfully, and sister said it looked exactly like you when you are reciting poetry at evening parties."

HEALING THE AFFLICTED.

Scientific Skill and Experience as Exemplified by Dr. A. B. Barker.

A Wonderful Array of Successful Operations in the Treatment of Diseases of the Eye, Ear, Throat and Lungs. '

The other day a Journal reporter, engaged in prosecuting an inquiry, called upon Dr. A. B. Barker, the eminent spocialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. The Doctor's apartments are at No. 4 West Washington street, upstairs, in the building at the northwest corner of Meridian and Washington streets, and while awaiting the Doctor's leisure the reporter had opportunity to observe the surroundings. These apartments, waiting and operating-rooms, are handsomely fitted up, and are in delightful contrast, by reason of their cozy and comfortable appearance, to the usual thing in the way of physicians' offices. The reporter was pleased to note that Dr. Barker is the graduate not only of first-class European medical institutions, but of the best colleges in this country. These diplomas speak for themselves and are credentials that any practitioner might well be proud to possess. More than this, Dr. Barker, who has had twenty-eight years' experience in the active practice of his profession, has been for many years a teacher in one of the leading medical colleges of Cincinnati and still holds a professorship in that institution. His success in this city, following his previous achievements before coming here, have made him known all over the Stat and he is receiving patients from far and near. It is a recognized fact that he has performed cures while here that have been physicians have failed.

While much of Dr. Barker's success is due to his skill, long experience and general knowledge, he is no doubt greatly aided by the fact that he is better equipped than any physician in the West to treat cases of disease involving the eye, ear, nose or throat. His array of instruments and appliances would certainly excite the admiration and envy of any physician in the land. These appliances, collected during the past quarter of a century in Europe and America, represent all that is most worthy in the inventive skill of surgery applied to the specialties be treats, and have a specific value far beyond what they cost. Many of these delicate and useful instruments can be found in no other collection in this country, and the Doctor, as he exhibited them to the reporter, handled them as tenderly as though they were things of life. Dr. Barker's treatment is entitled to special mention, from the fact that his skill is such as to enable him to engage the most difficult and sensitive cases without pain, thus divesting the patient of fear and sparing the shock that in the treatment by many practitioners brings disastrous resuits to what they term "successful operations." With Dr. Barker no operation is successful that does not effect a thorough and permanent benefit, and is brought about without needless pain to the patient. He was pleased to give the reporter a large amount of valuable information regarding his specialties, and spoke entertainingly of the achievements of science in the treatment of the eye. Here he opened one drawer after another, disclosing hundreds of artificial eyes. Of these wonderful imitations of the natural organ Dr. Barker has a greater and better selection than all the stocks in Indiana put together would afford.

Dr. Barker's fees are so reasonable that people of the most moderate means are not shut out from enjoying the benefits of his skill. During the few months he has been in this city he has made the following record of cases treated. This list includes, of course, only the most important cases:

68 operations for cross-eyes. Deatness, 6. Removal of eyes, 2. Polypus, 3. 22 operations for cataract. 6 removals of the tonsils. 3 operations on the eyelids. 1 operation for bair-lip. 460 eyes fitted with glasses. 22 cases of artificial eyes. " cases of granulated lids.

22 cases nasal catarrh and throat tronbles. It is well worth the while of any one wearing glasses to go to Dr. Barker and get spectacles that are actually suited to them. He first examines the eyes as an oculist to discover just what they need, and then fits them as an optician. The cost to the patient is no more than the value of the glasses, while the comfort in having secured a perfect fit is of the utmost impor-
